Hosker's first aerial victory came on August 25, 1916, when he shot down a German Albatros D.II over the Somme. Over the next two years, he continued to accumulate victories, displaying remarkable skill and tactical acumen. He became known for his aggressive flying style and his ability to outmaneuver enemy aircraft in intense dogfights.

One of Hosker's most notable achievements occurred on April 23, 1917, when he engaged in a fierce battle with a squadron of German Fokker Triplanes over the Arras sector. During the encounter, Hosker managed to shoot down four enemy planes, including the aircraft flown by the famous German ace Manfred von Richthofen, the "Red Baron."

Hosker's bravery and leadership qualities also earned him recognition. In 1917, he was promoted to squadron commander and awarded the Military Cross for his exceptional service. His reputation as a brilliant airman continued to grow, and he became one of the most feared adversaries in the skies over the Western Front.

After the war, Hosker remained in the Royal Air Force (RAF), which had been formed from the RFC. He served as an instructor and held various senior administrative positions. In 1926, he retired from the RAF with the rank of Wing Commander.

Throughout his post-war life, Hosker remained an active participant in aviation activities. He became a founding member of the Royal Aero Club and was instrumental in promoting the development of British aviation technology. He also authored several books on flying and aerial combat, sharing his experiences and insights with future generations of pilots.

Griffith 'Griff' Hosker died on July 30, 1961, at the age of 66. His legacy as a legendary British ace continues to inspire aviators and aviation enthusiasts worldwide.
