The State of Meiji Swordsmanship

The Meiji period was a time of great change in Japan. The country was rapidly modernizing, and the old ways of the samurai were becoming obsolete. Many samurai were struggling to find their place in the new Japan, and some turned to violence in order to express their frustration.

The swordsmen that Kenshin encounters in this volume are part of a growing movement of Meiji swordsmen who are trying to revive the old ways of the samurai. These swordsmen believe that violence is the only way to solve the problems of the new Japan. They are disillusioned with the Meiji government, which they see as corrupt and weak. They believe that the only way to restore order to Japan is to return to the old ways of the samurai.

Kenshin disagrees with the Meiji swordsmen. He believes that violence is not the answer. He believes that Japan can only be truly peaceful if its people learn to live together in harmony. He sets out to prove that there is another way, a way of peace and compassion.

The Battle for the Future of Japan

Kenshin's battle with the Meiji swordsmen is a battle for the future of Japan. It is a battle between the old ways and the new ways, between violence and peace. Kenshin's victory will prove that there is another way, a way of peace and compassion.
