Once I have a solid foundation of understanding, I start experimenting with different combinations of instruments, rhythms, and melodies. I'm not afraid to push boundaries and break away from conventional approaches. The key is to find a balance between respecting the integrity of each tradition while also creating something fresh and innovative.

As I work on a piece, I'm constantly refining and shaping it, listening attentively to how the different elements interact and evolve. It's an iterative process that requires patience and a willingness to embrace unexpected turns. Sometimes, the most magical moments happen when I least expect them, and it's in those moments that the music truly comes alive.
